Preface

The Index to Short Stories is the outgrowth of a large number of scattered bibliographies of special authors prepared to meet the recurring needs of students and members of the English Department in the University of Minnesota. Title lists of Kipling, of Stevenson, of Balzac, of F. Hopkinson Smith, and others proved to be so great a convenience to the library assistants as well as to the students, that the preparation of a comprehensive index for general use was the logical result of the work done in a small way for the benefit of one institution.

No claim for completeness in the work is made. To index all short stories would be impossible even were it desirable. American and English authors whose stories have appeared in magazines only have not been indexed. The work of no American or English writer is included unless he has had published by a reputable publishing house, at least one volume of collected stories; but all the work of the selected authors, as far as it has been available, has been indexed. Thus, collected editions, separate volumes, periodicals, and composite collections of various short stories, have all been consulted for the work of the chosen authors. No effort has been made to recover obscure and fugitive work of the authors indexed; that is the work of the bibliophile and special authority, but the best editions of the short story writers have been carefully and generously indexed. To discriminate the short story from longer works of fiction, the arbitrary limit of two hundred pages as the maximum length was adopted instead of a literary criterion on the basis of structure. This extends into the realm of the novellette, but was deemed expedient on the ground of convenience. A corresponding lapse in literary discrimination is to be found in the inclusion of many short sketches which are not, in the strict sense, stories. In the work of authors such as Nathaniel Hawthorne, Sir James Barrie, and Alphonse Daudet, to mention but three, it is often difficult to tell whether the sketch should be classed as a short story, or as a descriptive narrative. When in doubt, the sketch has been included; occasionally, when there has been no doubt, it has been indexed because contained in a volume in which all the other titles were those of stories, and the sketch might therefore be called for in the same connection. Farces, which are in reality short stories in dialogue form, such as those of William Dean Howells, have occasionally been included. Juvenile and fairy stories have been excluded except when they are a minor part of a selected author's work and their omission would make the bibliography incomplete. English translations of foreign short stories have been included wherever found.

As the work progressed the mass of material became so great that the cost of publication would have been prohibitive had all authors been retained.

Therefore, it was necessary to eliminate about three hundred minor authors whose work had been indexed. The selection was made by a referendum sent out to a hundred libraries, requesting them to indicate their preference as to the authors listed.

It is hoped that the form of entry is self-explanatory:

1. The arrangement is alphabetical by author and title, the author's name being printed in bold-faced type.

2. The title entry gives the exact title, followed by the author's name.

3. The author entry gives full information. The titles of the stories under the author's name are alphabetically arranged and each is followed by references given in the following order:

a. Reference to the complete edition if one has been issued, of the author's works.

b. References to the titles of the separate volumes of the author's works in which the story has appeared.

c. References to editions of collected stories in which the story has been reprinted. These are indicated by the use of the editor's name, whenever that is known.

d. References to the magazines if the story has appeared in periodicals.

By means of this arrangement, it is possible to find the author of a short story, the title only of which is known; the exact title of a story whose author is known, and the different places in which the story may be found. In college and high school work the demand often comes for as many copies as possible of a given story. The Index informs the librarian of resources perhaps unsuspected in his own collection. The abbreviations of magazine titles are those used in the Readers' Guide to Periodical Literature, and Poole's Index.

The Index has been compiled chiefly from the Library of Congress Catalogue, and verified by a comparison with local collections, and with the books in the Library of Congress.

CONTENTS

INDEX TO SHORT STORIES . . . . .	1
APPENDIX A.—List of the Books Indexed . . . . .	357
APPENDIX B.—List of Authors Classified by Nationality . . . . .	372

EXPLANATIONS

Abbreviations of periodical titles are those used in The Reader's Guide and Poole's Index.

In magazine references to Scribner's, Scribner's Monthly (being volumes 1-22 of the old series Century) is cited as Scrib o s.

In the references to Century Magazine the old series numbers of volumes are used. To get a new series number, subtract 22.

In citing collected works, [ ] are used to indicate publisher and ( ) for edition.

The order of references, as given under the author's name is as follows

1. Author's collected works
2. Author's separate works
3. Composite collections.
4. Magazines
